AZIZZA SAYS

The Sacramento Black Chamber of Commerce and our Foundation's Board of Directors have jointly determined that moving forward for the next couple of years that our priority will be on workforce development in the green tech and large tech industries where the focus is AI at present.

We noticed a huge employment gap within these two areas for both women and people of color. The Sacramento Black Chamber of Commerce is committed to addressing these issues in a number of ways moving forward. There will be a series of workshops, data collection and site visits and study missions over the next couple of years addressing these issues and learning from those in the industry whether there is need for policy change within the state of California to see change in not only hiring practices, but how to support cultural shifts as well.

August has been designated as National Black Business Month, but we would prefer to celebrate this all month, every month. You will hear from Black women-owned businesses throughout our network this month and we are taking this interest and concern to Washington D.C. in September during the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation's Annual Legislative Conference. We will engage in these issues through a series of panel discussions, workshops, and study missions over the next two years. From these events, we will collect data that will drive us, if necessary to create policy with the intent of changing the face of, or rather enhancing the face of the workforce in these areas throughout the state of California as our state has already taken the lead in changing the way we do business in these clean energy spaces.

So we appreciate this month being looked upon as National Black Business Month, but as you can see by our robust agenda, we will need more than a month to accomplish the goals we're setting. We hope that you will join us in learning, changing culture, and assuring that jobs are ready and we are ready to fill some of those positions before long.

There is still time to join us in Washington D.C. in September. For more information on our PROSPER program please contact us at info@sacblackchamber.org or call (916) 231-0416. Hope to hear from you soon.
